Agree on New Hot Line

By Walter Pincus Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - U.S. and Soviet officials agreed Tuesday to expand the hot line link between Washington and Moscow. President Ronald Reagan called the move "a modest but positive step toward enhancing stability."

A senior administration official noted that the Russians had sbown interest in pursuing another U.S. proposal raised during the bot line talks - setting up a means of exchanging information on terrorist groups in a nuclear crisis.

The official said he did not want to exaggerate the significance of the agreement to modernize the hot line, but said it was part of a "confidence building process" that was getting under way.

The hot line agreement, which took a year to negotiate, adds a facsimile transmission capability to the existing 67-words-per-minute teletype systems. This will permit the rapid sending of pages of text or graphic material such as maps and charts.

Soviet officials in Washington have gone oot of their way to describe the hot line talks as discussions between technicians, apparently boping to prevent the Reagan administration from taking credit

"However, [the party] decided that our candidates will not register until the Sandinist government guarantees the elections will be truly free and honest," Mr. Vega Mirinda said.

The Social Christians, like the nation's other opposition parties, have said they will not participate in the elections unless the government lifts the state of emergency imposed in March 1982, which includes press censorship and restric-. tions on political rallies.

This Year, Kennedy Shies From Limelight

SAN FRANCISCO - There is no formal notice in the Democratie National Convention's endless array of ceremonies, but this particular gathering marks at least an interruption in the Kennedy era of Democratic politics. Senator Edward M. Kennedy is to introduce Walter F. Mondale to the convention Thursday night, but the hall is not suffured with the party's oncerelentless fascination with the Massachusetts Democrat.

He declined delegate and "superdelegate" status this year. He is clearly shying from the San Fran-cisco limelight, but not in the stra-tegic fashion of past political in-trigues in which his shadow fell across entire conventions. His aides say he has his eye on post-convention activities, particularly on trying to ease hard feelings between the party's black and Jewish con-

The Democratic Track

Governor Mario Cuomo of New York, a Democrat, has summoned his party to unite the nation, the family of America, and not a minute too soon. In the last couple of days, lir Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro had been threatening to fumble away their time of triumph in endless distractions.

Let Ms. Ferraro be as disgusted as she ishes by the coldness of President Reagan's social policies. Attacking him for religious hypocrisy detracted from her cause. Though she now sounds properly chastened, she was momentarily looking holier than thou, elumsy. Clumsy, meanwhile, would be a kind verdict for her running mate's recent activities. Why would a candidate who has been at pains to stand apart from Jimmy Carter go out of his way to put himself in the hands of Bert Lance. not the most inspired Carter appointment?

And why, in the process, go out of his way to dump Charles Manatt as head of the Democratic National Committee?

Blunders both. With a whack, they abruptly chopped down the surprise and sense of politi cat sure-fontedness that followed Mr. Mondale's choice of a woman as running mate.

For all the outrage and astonishment it provoked, the Lance choice was not empty-headed. Professional politicians, black and white, affirm that Mr. Lance brings real strength to the campaign. Southerners know him as someone they can talk to. And Mr. Mondale owes him: After losing New Hampshire to Gary Hart, his candidacy might well have perished without Mr. Lance's efforts in the South. And Mr. Lance has been a patient. effective channel to Jesse Jackson.

Yet the astonishment survives, Mr. Lance was driven out as Mr. Carter's budget director by investigations of his banking activities. Yes. he was acquitted of most criminal charges and a jury could not decide whether he had filed false statements with his bank. But even granting the desirability of appointing a Southern party chief, was there no one available who is known regularly to turn square corners?

Mr. Mondale's rapid reversal and decision to keep Mr. Manatt is less troubling. He may pay a price in seeming indecision but there was no matter of principle here. How long the Lance decision hurts depends in part on how well the convention can focus the Democrats on their opponents rather than themselves.

"Our family . . . the whole family intact." In the Democrats' keynote speech, Mr. Cuomo echoed his own inaugural address as governor last year. More dramatically, he echoed the Kerner commission's 1968 warning about America turning into separate societies.

The Republicans, he argued, are willing to "cut this nation in half, into those temporarily better off and those worse off than before, and call it recovery." Mr. Cuomo called for nuclear arms control, for attention to the rights of minorities, labor, the individual, But most of alt he summoned Democrats to the cause of fairness, denouncing President Reagan's adherence to survival of the fittest.

The power of that theme to unify the country in the general election campaign remains to be seen. For the moment, the Democrats will be gratified if it unifies their party.

The Sandinists' Promise

At a meeting Wednesday of OAS ambassa-dors, the United States will be reminding its neighbors that Nicaragua still owes them a tremendous debt. It was incurred five years ago when the Organization of American States removed the legitimacy of a sitting member government, that of Anastasio Somoza, giving the Sandinist rebels a priceless boon.

It was, however, a boon with a condition attached: The Sandinists were expected to create "a truly democratic government." They accepted that condition. While "the solution to Nicaragua's serious problem is the exclusive competence of the Nicaraguan people," they told the OAS, "hemispheric solidarity, essential for this plan to take hold, will be accorded in fulfillment of the [OAS] resolution."

So where is that "truly democratic government"? The Sandinists bave a collection of excuses to offer for their shortfall. The fact is that the Marxist core of the Nicaraguan revolution has taken power to itself to the extent that its straitened circumstances have permitted. Only, it seems, under foreign advice and pressure has it left a limited opening for the pluralistic elements it promised to respect when it seized power. So far, these elements are being denied the chance to wage a fair fight in the elections that the Sandinist rulers finally, and grudgingly, scheduled for Nov. 4. The struggle of the Nicaraguan guerrillas is now in the forefront of hemispheric attention. Note, however, that the principal reason most of those guerrillas went into the field was that they could see the Sandinists defaulting on the obligations they undertook to the OAS. Just as the Somozas limited open legal challenge by peaceful means, so bave the Sandinists. In both cases, armed opposition resulted.

One understands why the Managua government, like any other, resists armed attack. Resisting political challenge — resisting pre-cisely the sort of political challenge it promised to allow - is very different. But the Sandinists are squeezing the legal opposition within Nicaragua and, unlike the Salvadoran government, barring the door to any polinical role by the armed opposition, even though that opposition insists it is ready to lay down arms. Those with misgivings about U.S. support of the Nicaraguan insurgents ought to have none about U.S. support of a Nicaraguan democratic process. On the contrary, those in the West-ern hemisphere and in Europe who crinicize U.S. sponsorship of the "contras" should lead the parade of those demanding that the Sandinists honor their word to the OAS.

Other Opinion

Disillusionment in Honduras

As if the Reagan administration did not have enough trouble in Central America already with a hostile government in Nicaragua and a civil war in El Salvador, now the anti-Communist stance that it has taken in the region is being undermined by an erstwhile ally - Honduras.

For the last two years the Honduran government has willingly, even eagerly, cooperated with some controversial U.S. policies in Cen-tral America. It has allowed U.S. military advisers to train army units from El Salvador in Honduras. To help the United States pressure Nicaragua, it has allowed U.S. combat forces to conduct military maneuvers on its soil and in its territorial waters. And Honduran officials have looked the other way while "contra" rebels financed by the CIA have used Honduras as a base to raid Nicaragua. The Hondurans benefited from their cooperation. The U.S. military aid that they receive each year tripled from 1981 to 1983, and will increase again next year. But at the same time the Honduran government was seen by other Latin American nations as "the harlot of Central America." according to Dan Williams, a Los Angeles Times correspondent. That kind of talk has become so common, and so burtful to Honduran pride, that now rumblings of discontent are emanating from Tegucigalpa.

The new head of the Honduran military. Air Force General Walter Lopez Reyes, has demanded more control over U.S. military personnel stanoned in Honduras, and he wants U.S. advisers to train as many Hondurans as Salvadorans. Civilian government leaders are asking for a review of the 1954 treaty between Honduras and the United States to get more benefits for Honduras. The effect of such nationalism should not be underestimated.

The Link to the Carter Days

The basic link to the Carter days remains an uncomfortable one for Walter Mondale: more contentious, perhaps, than he dared to realize. The rampaging delegates in San Francisco complaining about a "shot in the foot" were not simply standing up for Charlie Manatt [the party's national chairman]. They were attacking the record, the achievement and the memory of Jimmy Carter. They were signaling their belief — and Ronald Reagan's belief — that the legacy of the Carter years is the basic reason Mr. Mondale doesn't stand a prayer.

The San Francisco 4,000 have a chance tacitly to accept or publicly to challenge that judgment. We hope, because it is long overdue, that they will challenge it. Plenty went wrong with the Carter White House. But there was also a certain courage -on the Panama treaty —and a certain dogged honesty on the central issues of moral rights and moral wrongs. With [Bert] Lance in the back room (and Carter on the front podium) the Democrats can at least begin to mutter: "As we were saying when we were so rudely interrupted . . .

1909: Spanish Disunity on Morocco MADRID — The opposition to the military intervention in Morocco is increasing daily, especially in Catalonia, where Radicals, Republicans and even Nationalists are organizing meetings at which the Government is violently attacked. In contrast to this attitude a large number of young men of aristocratic families ask permission to enlist as volunteers for service in Morocco. General Marinas began his forward movement [on July 17]. His object is to occupy the ravine and the heights of Sidi Muzas to cut off the retreat of the Moors. The gunbout Alonzo Pinzon reports an unusual activity among the Kabyles at Cape Tres Furcas. The death of Kaid Shaldy is not confirmed. The disappearance of the principal chief of the insurgents would undoubtedly diminish the resistance of the Moors.

At the Convention, Prime Time Is All

SAN FRANCISCO — The hege-mony of idevision over the political convention has been firmly estab-lished. Its forces (14,500) outnumber delegates and alternates 3 to 1 and outspend them at a much higher rauo. It is as if the media had assem-bled for a convention of their own.

with politicians invited to perform. The limousines, tokens of affluence and influence, roll up to the convention halls, disgorging more an-chormen than statesmen, and to greater recognition and acclaim. Supplicant senators cruise the manorial anchor booths rimming the arena, offering themselves for interviews or whatever air time they can scrounge.

Prime time is all. Controversy, platform challenges, reports of rules committees — these are shunted into the afternoon, while the evening hours are programmed for unity. The mention of a "floor fight" in prime time can make convention managers quake. It is the political equivalent of nuclear blackmail.

In Detroit in 1980. Ronald Reagan, appearing for his acceptance speech, squelched an ovation after eight minutes, chiding the delegates for using up his prime time. In New York. Senator George McGovern opened a speech with a wry comment about finally getting to address a convention in prime time. Of course. everyone remembered 1972, when Mr. McGovern's acceptance speech in Miami Beach was delayed by wrangling on the floor until 2:30 A.M. That seemed a harbinger of a disastrous campaign. In 1980, the most disturbing rumor to race through Madison Square Gar-den, as the Democratic convention neared its close, was that diehard supporters of Edward M. Kennedy might resort to parliamentary tricks to delay Jimmy Carter's acceptance speech until after the peak viewing hours. It was mercifully untrue. The Carter-Kennedy conflict had just been resolved with an agreement trading some Kennedy grievances for one hour of debate in prime time.

Nothing preoccupies convention managers so much as the care and feeding of television with a pleasant diet that stays on schedule. The pro-gram intersperses live proceedings with taped programs, and here in San Francisco the Mondale camp has a special representative assigned to work with each network, ready to deliver up delegates and dignitaries as needed. No TV demand is considered unreasonable.

The last convention in which delegates dared to complain about having their view blocked by television equipment was 1972. Since then delegates have learned to live with TV monitors enabling them to see what is happening a few bundred feet away. Yet Walter F. Mondale says the Democratic convention will not be — nor, be claims, would he want it to be — run in a fashion as disciplined as the Republican convention.

My favorite captured document from the Republican high command was the secret advance scenario for Aug. 22, 1972, the evening of President Nixon's renomination in Miami Beach, I watched in utter fascination as it all unrolled on one. There was John Wayne's ad lib, "Don't get set-tled down for a speech cause speech-makin' isn't my business." As ordained, the roll call reached its climax at 10:14 P.M. when Missouri put Mr. Nixon over the top. This signaled a demonstration, which was cut off in exactly five minutes, so that, as Gerald R. Ford read from the script, "We may continue with the roll call."

At 10:35 P.M., right on time, Mr. Ford announced the final vote. The scenario then called for cueing the balloun drop and a "Nixon Now!" demonstration, this time to last 12 minutes. It did.

To this day, the 1972 convention remains a model of a media-age conrennon. The Democrats will probahly never measure up to that on-time standard. But they're trying.

The writer, senior correspondent for the Cable News Network, contributed this comment to The New York Times.

A Certain Consistency In Mondale's Strategy By David S. Broder An Francisco — Hard as it may be to believe, there is a kind wacky internal consistency to what there Mondale has been doing The ice of General Market and the Chronicle. "I think the much what much wha choice of Geraldine Ferraro as his running mate, the appointment of Bert Lance as the general chairman of their campaign and even the early focus on the religious credentials of the Democrats vs. President Reagan fit into a strategy.

Already it has proved to be a highrisk strategy, capable of backfiring. But that is different from saying there is no logic to it at all. What the Democrats are providing is a liberal ticket, ignoring Gary Harr's chic "new ideas" rhetoric and talking the old-time Democratic religion in accents and words that Mr. Mondale's strategists bope will sound comfortable and familiar to the core constituencies of the party.

Religion itself is one of the old-time values that the Mondale-Ferraro team is trying to regain from the clutches of President Reagan and the Reviblience. the Republicans Ms. Ferraro, in her first news conference as a member of the ticket, said Mr. Reagan's budgetary and so-cial policies made it hard for her to believe he was "a good Christian." Mr. Mondale later told the San Francisco Chronicle that "my faith unmistakably has taught me that social justice is part of a Christian's responsibility," while Mr. Reagan is "out to lunch" on that subject.

Several Democrats, including Sen-ator John Glenn of Ohio and San Francisco's Mayor Dianne Feinstein, said they wished that religion could be kept out of the campa but that is not going to happen. Ms. Ferraro argued that the Republicans bad brought it in by questioning how she, a Roman Catholic, could be an opponent of anti-abortion legisla-tion. But it is clear that she and Mr. Mondale would have got around to the subject somehow.

Mr. Reagan and the Republicans have been having a field day with it. In the 1980 campaign and through-out his term, Mr. Reagan has em-braced not only the anti-abortion position of many conservative religionists but the cause of restoring organized prayer to public schools.

What was revealing was Mr. Mondale's explanation of why be, a liberal minister's son, was talking in religional to the control of the contr gious terms. "What I'm trying to do is let people know who I am, and that's what Gerry [Ferraro] is trying to do," subordinate to the secret police.

It has been clear ever since she first spoke as Mr. Mondale's choice for vice president that Ms. Ferraro was picked not just as a woman but as an ethnic Catholic. Richard Wirthlin Mr. Reagan's pollster, said that Ms. Ferraro's speech in St. Paul, Minnesota, last week, dwelling on "family." faith, neighborhood, country and hard work, was, as he put it, a page right out of our 1980 play book."

It was also a page from President Jimmy Carter's successful 1976 play book. It tends to be forgotten now but Mr. Carter was the "traditional values" candidate in that election the man who talked about his "bornagain" experience of religious faith and who dwelled on his navy service and his family's long attachment to the Georgia land on which they grew their peanut crops.

In picking Mr. Lance as the outfront strategist and spokesman lor the 1984 Democratic campaign, Mr Mondale was deliberately seeking to revive the Carter association and the Carter theme. Mr. Lance and his wife are not only longstanding personal and political pals of the Carters but like Jimmy and Rosalynn, people who display their religion. When Mr Lance was under investigation and standing trial for alleged banking vio lations, be and his wife have both said, it was religious faith that sus tained them until he was acquitted.

Ferraro and Lance symbolize two groups whose disaffection has hurt the party.

Ms. Ferraro and Mr. Lance also happen, and not accidentally, to symolize the two voting groups whose disaffection in recent campaigns has cost the party what had been considered its "natural majority" status Democrats have been losing at the national level because of defections by second-generation ethnic Catho lies in the northern metropolitan areas and by Southern whites.

Both groups, the political scientists say, have been driven out of the Democratic coalition by the Democrats identification with social policies and groups they regard as threatening to their status. Mr. Mondale is no about to turn his back on affirmative action or other programs designed to help blacks or Hispanics. But he is trying to say — by pushing forward Ms. Ferraro and Mr. Lance — that he understands and recognizes those who are made nervous by them.

The tactic is purposely blatant. Ms Ferraro is a very ethnic ethnic -: brassy, fast-talking New Yorker. Mr Lance is almost a caricalure of a "good old boy" Dixie politician, all folksy charm and chatter.

A nervous minority of delegates here thinks Ms. Ferraro may be a loose cannon on the decks of the Mondale campaign, and a vocal majority believes that the symbolism the Lance appointment is all wrong.

But both choices really do reflect
Mr. Mondale's view of his political needs in what is obviously an uphil struggle against Mr. Reagan. This is no time for subtlety. He reminds me of the chorus director in high school wbo clearly saw that his ensemble was under-rehearsed for a rapidly approaching concert. "If you can't sing good," he said, "sing loud."

Yugoslav Repression: Troubling Trends in the Post-Tito Regime

N EW YORK — Until recently, one could reasonably hope that post-Tito Yugoslavia was moving gradually toward democratization. The main evidence was an increasing latitude for discussion of political issues in the press.

Now, however, the situation has taken a serious turn toward repression. It began with seizures in recent months of whole issues of newspapers and journals carrying articles deemed critical of the regime and the system. Then, on the evening of April 20, the government took a giant step toward silencing political discussion. arresting 28 Yugoslavs of diverse po-litical views as they met in a Belgrade living room to hear a talk on nationalist problems by Milovan Djilas, the grand old man of political dissent in Eastern Europe. There had been nothing secretive about the meeting: it was one of a well-known regular series, held every other Friday evening with a shifting attendance. This was Mr. Djilas's first appearance. After the arrests, the police searched the bouses of all 28, seizing books, manuscripts and letters. Several were beaten while in custody. Two were charged with disseminaling "hostile propaganda." One was dismissed from his job, another suspended and others may lose their posts. Three days later, Srdja Popovic. a prominent lawyer who had agreed to represent most of the 28. was himself interrogated for 12 hours. His home and offices were searched and documents seized, including files of various clients. One of those arrested, Radmoir Radovich, the only factory worker in the group and a supporter of efforts to organize an independent labor union, was released after a day of interrogation, then taken back into custody twice more for further questioning. After the third session he is said to have been depressed, and shortly afterward he disappeared. A week later, he was found dead at a summer cottage belonging to an aunt. An autopsy confirmed that he poi-influence in religion and in "mass culture."

Western cultural trends, including pop music, were strongly attacked by Konstantin Chernenko in a speech to the Central Committee in June 1983. This was at the meeting that nominated Yuri Andropov, then Communist Party general secretary, to the post of president. Mr. Cher-neuko now holds both those positions. The Pravda statement reads in part: "A feeling of love toward the motherland, and a feeling of hatred toward its enemies, must be instilled in young people with ever increasing persistence, [together with] a high political and class vigilance and an unfailing readiness to do heroic deeds."

The "enemies" of the Soviet Union are not named, but the tone of rigid ideological ortho-doxy leaves little doubt about their addresses and views. There is also an exhortation to "block all channels so that literature and art will not be police pressure led to his death. Since April, there have been five more arrests (two from the original 28) followed by criminal charges. Three of the newly arrested are on hunger strikes. One, Vojisslav Seselj, 29, was sentenced last week to eight years imprisonment.

Yugoslavia for years. Though there are many political prisoners in the country, most have been punished because of ethnically related views and associations that appear to the authorities to threaten the country's fragile unity. The present group, except in their common commitment to freedom of inquiry, disagree among themselves as much as they disagree with the authorities. Even so, the authorities will risk the international criticism that is inevitable when wellknown persons such as Mr. Djilas and Mr. Popovic are involved. Why?

discuss the matter with me and representatives of two human rights groups, the Helsinki Watch Commit-tee and the International League for Human Rights, who went with me to Yugoslavia to look into it. To their credit, these officials declined. Given Belgrade's official silence, we must rely on other information to determine why this crackdown is taking place now. Yugoslavia is in deep trouble. Inflation is out of control, the economy is in decline, one of five or six workers is imemployed, the foreign debt is enormous. Like other countries in Eastern Europe and Latin America, Yugoslavia has been forced to accept severe austerity measures to get the international loans it needs to stay affoat. But while such measures often produce unrest, m Yugoslavia this is complicated by ethnic and regional politics. What drives and shapes the economy is neither the market nor a centrally directed plan; important economic decisions are taken by the six republies and two provinces that make up the country. Coordination, such as it is, is through a collective presidency representing the various republics nd provinces.

This system, combining authoritarianism and decentralization, seems incapable of solving the eco-nomic crisis. Something must give. Yugoslavia could democratize, per mitting wider debate and the emer gence of more imaginative and talented people in the government. The alternative is repression, designed to ensure that economic difficulties do not provoke labor and consumer unrest that, in turn, could lead to cries for basic social and political reforms threatening the entrenched bureaucracy.

Despite recent setbacks, the situation remains fluid. In the past, Yugoslavia has shown a degree of tolerance for dissenting views, as long as the opposition remained unorganized. Americans have many signifi-cant commercial, cultural and other contacts with Yugoslavia and, by reacting strongly to the treatment of Mr. Dillas, Mr. Popovic and others, have the opportunity to influence Yugoslavia to choose the path of openness and democratization. Expressions of concern have their effect and serve the mutual interests of Yugoslavia and the United States.

Regarding "Sierra Leone: A Case of Apathy More Than Anger" (June 30) by Clifford D. May: The report is reminiscent of certain running, but was phased out on orders from the World Bank. He says Sierra Leone is not a developing country — but a building boom is visible in various parts of the country. The telephone system functions and a West German firm is currently updating it.

Lastly, only one person died in the January disturbances.

It is a pity that people who call themselves responsible journalists can dash through Freetown without seeing 95 percent of the country and then issue reports that they would like the world to believe. Mr. May's report has not enhanced the reputauon of your paper.

An interesting idea. But I wonder whether China in such circumstances could have nuclear trade with the United States, or for that matter with any state with nuclear weapons.

In the United States, very few nuclear installations are under international (i.e. International Atomic Energy Agency) safeguards, although in theory more could be. To Get Backers for Its Own Strategy

By Giles Merritt International Herald Trabane

LUXEMBOURG - "I am only midwife to the project," says Clay T. Whitehead of Luxembourg's ambitious plan to become a dominant force in Europe's cable TV revolution.

But Mr. Whitehead makes it clear that the 16-channel television satellite that is to be launched by 1980 will be some baby.

Mr. Whitehead's apparent mod-esty may stem from the unwanted notoriety that has come his way in recent weeks. France's minister of state for post and telecommunications. Louis Mexandeau, has ac-cused the former director of the U.S. Office of Telecommunications Policy of being at the head of a "Coca-Cola attack" by American financial interests on Europe's "artistic and cultural integrity."

The French government fears that Luxembourg's surprise move to put its own satellite into space may wreck France's ambitious.

high-tech broadcasting strategy. Luxembourg, a nation of fewer than 400,000 people bordered by France. Belgium and West Germany, is determined to defy attempts by Paris to make it drop its plans. It sees broadcasting as one of its main sources of income, and to further that goal, Luxembourg's prime minister, Pierre Werner, personally recruited Mr. Whitehead from his post as head of Hughes Communiembourg stood to lose out in the growth of cable TV, that prompted it to plan its own satellite.

If the project succeeds, Luxembourg will play an even more prom-inent role in telecommunications. Its new satellite company, Coronet. will generate TV programs expected to bring in worth several billions of dollars a year in advertising and distribution revenues, and will be beamed to homes from Hamburg

As well as making Luxembourg a powerful force in the cable TV business, the rapid development of direct broadcasting technology means that individual viewers may be able to pick up Coronet pro-grams soon on roof-mounted dish aerials. That possibility disturbs the authorities in France, where television has long been a state mo-

The French are also upset that the first casualty of the new Coro-net satellite planned by Mr. White-head would be France's expensive TDF-1 satellite. Luxernbourg had been due to buy a share in that satellite and defray its $350 million cost, but the chances of that are now remote.

Coronet is in the process of deciding on the medium-power satellite it will put up, using Europe's Ariane rocket launcher, Mr. Whitehead believes that for $150 million Coronet can buy two satellites — "off-the-peg with a few tailoring alterations" — and put up one while keeping the second as a spare.
At the same time, Coronet is forming a core group of investors — European financial institutions that will collectively subscribe no more than $200 million - and benegotiations on leasing out

Kremlin Executes Ex-Chief of Elite Moscow Store

By Seth Mydans

New York Times Service MOSCOW - The former director of Moscow's most elegant food store, whose connections were said to have included Leonid f. Brezhney, has been executed for corruption, according to Soviet sources familiar with the case.

Yuri K. Sokolov, director of the ornate Gastronom No. I on Gorki Street, had been sentenced to death last November on charges of taking bribes and what the official press agency Tass described as "various illegal machinations with food products."

The public announcement of the sentence was seen at the time as a dramatic signal of a crackdown on corruption in high places by Yuri V. Andropov. who succeeded to the Soviet leadership upon the death of President Brezhnev. Since then, however, the Soviet sources said. Mr. Sokolov's contacts had lobbied for a commutation of sentence and had managed to keep him for sever-

The word of his execution five months after Mr. Andropov's death was seen by diplomats as one of several indications that the anticorruption drive, though no longer a major Kremlin policy, has not been halted.

Workmen convert the road by Manchester's Royal Exchange Theater and War Memorial into a pedestrian precinct to revitalize city's shopping area.

Chinatown in Manchester: A Sign of New Prosperity

By Barnaby J. Feder Vin York Times Service

ANCHESTER, England - At 1:30 A.M. on a Sunday, as they wait for the youths to begin spilling out after a Saturday night at the city's discotheques, the groups of policemen strolling along Portland Street are hopeful, but they do not find talk of the economic recovery here in northwest England transportations. gland very convincing.

"We haven't seen it." a young policeman said,
"The discos used to draw crowds almost every night of the week. People cut way back during the recession, and they haven't really come back yet. Robberies are what is up.

On the whole, though. Manchester's mood is more positive than it has been in years, and that is good news for Britain. Manchester is a reasonable litmus test of the country's well-being, Unlike London, Manchester is not so essential to international commerce that it can prosper if the rest of the nation does not. On the other hand, the Industrial Revolution brought the city the wealth, influence and cosmopolitan taste to ensure that it would never be a backwater.

"Manchester is the only English city that can look London in the face, not merely as a region-al capital, but as a rival version of bow men should live in a community." wrote the historian, A.J.P. Taylor, in 1957, in an article reviewing the breadth of Manchester's economic and cul-

> No one visiting Manchester today can con-elude that the city's lot in the 20th century has been an easy one. There is still derelict land where bombs fell during the Christmas raid of 1944. When acre upon acre of crumbling Victonian housing was torn down, the inner city was virtually emposed of residents. Old Trafford Industrial Park, once the largest manufacturing center in Europe, is only partly used, and even then for warehousing rather than production. Hundreds of textile mills and factories stand vacant or little used in Manchester and the satellite cities that give the metropolitan area a population of 2.6 million.

Because of the old mills, it looks like a place that has seen its best days," said Donald Witter, the area manager for the Midland Bank. Perhaps it has. In 1844, when Manchester could jusofiably call itself the capital of Europe's industrial Revolution, a character in Benjamin Disraeli's novel "Coningsby" could observe, "Manchester is as great a human exploit as Athens." That era is gone.

Gone with it, though, are the hideous slums, ahuses and pollution that drove Friedrich Engels, whose father owned a mill here, to write the scarbing artack on capitalism "Conditions of the Working Classes in England in 1844" and to support the work of Karl Marx.

Manchester's industrial soul survives, but it is the eity's role as a financial, transportation, cultural and administrative center for northern England that has helped it attract new business and endure the decline of its traditional industries. Less diversified cities, like Liverpool, 35 miles (65 kilometers) to the west. Sheffield and

Birmingham, have not fared as well. Manchester's downtown banks are busy; advertising, accounting, stock-broking and con-sulting concerns flourish, and central hotels like the Brittania, the Portland and the Midland have been refurbished to accommodate traveling business executives. Most of the 30 miles of Victorian sewers are being rebuilt, and traffic has been rearranged to stimulate the recovery of the downtown retailers. To the delight of local gourmets, a Chinatown is rapidly growing.

"The Chinese have been moving here from all over northern England because they see Man-chester is a place where they can prosper," said Albert Tung, manager of the Happy Gathering Restaurant, one of several that have opened in the heart of the city in the last year.

There are continuing signs of decline, of course. The canal system that connected Man-chester to the Mersey River and the Irish Sea a 19th-century engineering feat that once made the city Britain's fourth largest port — is on the verge of being closed for good for lack of traffic. But, these days, sueb developments are usually only part of a less worrying picture. The canal system's decline bas been balanced by the network of superhighways in the region and the steady expansion of Manebester International Airport, Britain's largest municipal airport.

ANCHESTER residents, or Mancunians, have a reputation for being open and to the point. "A deal that would take two cocktail parties to arrange in London gets done over one cup of coffee here," said David Plowright, the managing director of Granada Television, the independent commercial television station based here.

Nevertheless, the city today is a hard one to figure out. After four decades of migration from Manchester, satellite cities like Wigan. Bolton and Stockport are so large in relacion to the urban center that there is a policical and social hollowness to it. City executives worry that the government's plans to abolish the metropolitan counties it created in 1974 will encourage political infighting and drive up regional expenses. The potential for conflict increased this year when leftist Labor Party candidates won a majority on the City Council.

Whether or not city government veers toward theatrics as a result of the election, Mancunians will have a special circus to see this fall. The old Opera House, closed since 1978, is reopening with the musical "Barnum," starring Michael Crawford. The rescuers of the theater are the same group that successfully saved the Palace Theater from oblivion in 1981.

Nakasone Rival Touches Sensitive Nerve in Japan On Issue of Quality of Life

By Clyde Haberman New York Times Service

OKYO — Japan's nascent campaign for prime minister has spurred fresh debate over the quality of life here. The issue is whether the government should spend more on bousing, roads, sewers and parks, which are called "social asseis" and have march to prosperity. No one argues against improvements, but the question of how fast the country should move has created one of the few genuine debates to arise recently over basic domestie goals.

Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, an advocate of fiscal austerity, says the recovery from economic recession is not so strong that the government can suddenly loosen restraints on public works spending. Various cabinet mem-bers bave made clear that they are not prepared to raise the necessary money for ambioons urban renewal projects through either tax increases or borrowing.

But the prime minister's main rival in the ruling conservative coalition, Kiiehi Miyazawa, has stirred up domestic politics by suggesting that Japan can well afford more programs, with-out resorting to unpopular taxes or bond issues. He says that future economic growth will exceed Mr. Nakasone's forecasts and that this could inance a program to "double Japan's assets" over the next decade. As an example of present inadequacies, Mr. Miyazawa cites the fact that only one-third of Japanese bouseholds are connected to main wer lines and that more than balf of all homes lack flush toilets. By his calculations, four million families — roughly 10 percent of the population — live in substandard housing.

"We should do what we can now, not so much to expon our products more but to improve might lure Liberal Democratic politicians weary ers, roads. We can do it."

It is no coincidence, he acknowledged, that his "asset doubling" plan comes as he is thinking seriously of challenging Mr. Nakasone next fall for the presidency of the Liberal Democratic Party. The party, a federation of conservative factions, has governed for 29 years and is in no factions, has governed for 29 years and is in no factions. foreseeable danger of forfeiting control. Thus, whoever wins the party election in November is assured of becoming prime minister.

All signs suggest Mr. Nakasone is in a strong position to become the first Japanese bead of government to survive more than two years in office since Eisaku Sato's eight-year tenure ended in 1972. Mr. Nakasone's rating in public opinion polls is unusually high. More important for his re-election, be holds the balance of power

Some political observers believe that he is especially vulnerable on domestic matters, which have received short shrift while he has occupied himself with foreign affairs.

Possible opponents include Toshio Komoto, director general of the Economic Planning Agency, and Mr. Miyazawa. > Mr. Miyazawa, 64, has a sterling government resume, including tours as foreign minister and as head of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry. But he has held no important positions in the party, and that is a handicap among Liberal Democrats.

In recent months he has concentrated on political fence-mending. Recently, he went to China on a highly publicized trip intended to burnish his foreign policy credemials. Oddly enough, his greatest political boon may have been an assault on him last March at a Tokyo make sure that American ships have up-to-theminute information on conditions there as well as in all other oceans of the world. Unlike civilian oceanographers whose main pursuit is pure science, Commodore John Riebard Scesholtz, the navy oceanogapher, says his job is to help the navy "fight smarter" by giving battle commanders a better idea of the hour-tohour marine environment in which their units are steaming or flying; to "turn pure science into a usable product." The "character" of the ocean and the lower atmosphere above it are of more than casual interest. Commodore Seesholtz cites several examples. Although it was once thought otherwise, the pings from sonar or sound-wave mecbanisms meant to detect submarines are now able to outmaneuver his adversary. An "atmospherie boundary layer" caused by plane attacking an enemy ship might be better able to avoid detection by flying several hun-dred feet ahove the water, rather than bugging it. In addition, an aircraft carrier task group can 7 ASHINGTON - Two priorities of be guided by oceanography data from a hope-Navy ocean science these days are the southern oceans and the world's strate-operations" as little as 50 miles away, he said.

Commodore Seesholtz's command includes about 3,000 people, many of them civilian scientists, at 65 locations around the world.

In the 18th and 19th centuries, Britain's Royal Navy made navigation safer for the world by charting costal and shoal waters with lead weights and ropes called leadlines. But the job is far from finished. The Navy Oceanographer commands 12 vessels, six of which spend most of their time charting the ocean, usually with depth-fioding sonar, rarely with leadlines.

"In the deep ocean, only about 25 or 30 percent of the bottom is adequately surveyed," the commodore said. "In coastal and shallow waters, we probably have 900 ship-years of work ahead of us to make it really safe to operate in a

With his broad grin, his roly-poly countenance and his forceful speaking style, Mr. Sharon has emerged as easily the most charismatic campaigner in the Herut camp. Mr. Sharon has been a tireless campaigner, appearing some-times five times a day. If the Likud hloc, the Herut-led parliamentary coalition, wins the July 23 elections, it seems certain that he will be able o demand a senior cahinet post, as opposed to his current status of minister without portfolio.

The Tiberias rally was an example of how the Herui Party has used Mr. Sharon in the campaign. He has generally been kept off television, apparently because of fears that he might turo off more voters than he would attract. Instead, he has been sent to perk up the spirits of the party faithful, often in poor development towns or localities with large populations of Oriental Jews, from North Africa and the Middle East.

More Flights, Fewer Trained Controllers Contribute to Rise in Delays on Airlines in U.S.

By Douglas B. Feaver Wadungton Pret Service

ASHINGTON — "I expect most businessmen can endure a delay of 30 to 45 minutes without complaining."

wrote a New York businessman, Carson E Beadle. "What drives us crazy is finding ourselves delayed two to three hours, with the delays announced 15 minutes at a time."

Mr. Beadle's ire was directed at USAir, whose 7 P.M. flight from New York's LaGuardia Airport to Louisville. Kentucky, left the ground about 9:20 P.M. His return flight the next day. scheduled for 3 P.M., did not leave until 4:30 P.M. because there was no room to land in New

His letter, on file with the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board, is one of many that detail the maddening effect that delays have on air travelers and airline executives.

A major American assumption - that the airlines will fly on time - seems under attack, especially on the East Coast, where one of every five flights into or out of New York is delayed 15 minutes or more. There are several reasons:

• The air traffic control system operates differently now, partly because of the controllers' strike in 1981.

· Because of deregulation, intensely competilive airlines now bring many flights to big cities at the same time and clog the airports.

Air travel accompanying the strong economic recovery is at record levels.

• The weather. Because the problem is complex, relief will come in small steps — and slowly.

Last month, according to Federal Aviation Administration statistics, there was an average of 46 delays longer than 15 minutes for every 1,000 flights at the nation's busiest 22 airports. At the three major airports in the New York City area, the average was 194.6 delays per 1,000 flights. If those three airports were removed from the list, the average number of delays per 1,000 flights would drop to 22.8.

There were 40,852 delays of more than 15 minutes in the United States in June, a 106 percent increase over June 1983. For the first six months of 1984 there were 189,473 delays, an increase of 72.6 percent over the first six months

OMPLAINTS to the Civil Aeronautics Board about flight problems — usually delays — almost doubled for the second quarter of 1984 over the same period in 1983. "We just see the tip of the iceberg," said Hoyte Decker of the board.

The Federal Aviation Administration's air traffic control system has not fully recovered from the firing of 11,400 striking controllers in August 1981 by President Ronald Reagan. At that time, the FAA had 16,375 controllers. 81 percent of whom were fully qualified. As of April 30 this year, it had 11,974; only 62 percent of them were fully qualified.

Lifting the quotas bad two results. passenger on the ground no more than 30 minures. That means there is a significant inbound rush, followed by a significant outbound rush. In Atlanta, Chicago and St. Louis, the airports serve as hubs for at least two competing carriers and the traffic problems are exacerbated.

The ideal bub-and-spoke scheme keeps the changing airlines.

The FAA insists that the great majority of summer, are attributable to thunderstorms and other weather problems. The afternoon thunderheads that regularly move eastward, bringing highly localized but severe rain showers, are a significant threat even to jumbo jets, and many pilots will not go through them.

When a line of thunderstorms moves across Pennsylvania — even when skies are clear in New York and Washington — pilots maneuver to get over and around the bad weather. The results are fouled traffic patterns - and delayed passengers — throughout the East.

The New York City area's three airports present an unusual challenge to the FAA because they are so close to each other. Approach and departure routes at each airport intersect ap-

The FAA is drafting an East Coast plan to simplify traffic routings and controller responsibilities to ease the burden, but it is at least a year from being carried out.

In the meantime, Donald D. Engen, head of the FAA, has organized a task force of government and industry experts to try to develop a better understanding of each other's problems and work on solutions.

The solutions have problems. If the deregulated airlines meet together to coordinate schedules, they could be in violation of antitrust laws. These airlines are seeking FAA sponsorship of relief in that area, while retaining the basic position that scheduling should be unfettered.

The FAA also plans to acquire a new computer to replace a 30-year-old air traffie system that has often been modified and is close to capacity. The new computer will cost about $10 billion over 10 years. The money will come from an aviation trust fund, which is financed by an 8 percent tax on passenger tickets and taxes on general aviation fuel.

Aviation executives fear that this year's transportation appropriations bill in Congress will never get passed because of a continuing battle over mass transit between the House committee roach and departure routes at the others.

What looks like a simple takeoff at LaGuarpropriates the funds. The executives are conto the air traffic control system to handle the change in the way airlines operate and thus has dia may force a plane landing at Kennedy into a cerned that when the new Congress comes in had a heavy impact on traffic control. The Delight of 'Babes in Arms'

By Sheridan Morley

LONDON—The unexpected de-light of the week, indeed of the summer, has been the London premiere of "Babes in Arms," a Rodgers and Hart musical from 1937 which never made it across the Atlantic largely because soon after the Broadway opening it was hijacked by Hollywood where MGM tore ipart its superlative score, inserted a lot of irrelevant numbers by other composers and then threw the whole shapeless mishmash to Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland.

Then came the war, and by the time that was over "Oklahoma" and the start of a new Rodgers partnership with Hammerstein made his Hart shows oddly unstageable for a decade or three.

But, as the recent triumphs of "Pal Joey" and "On Your Toes" would suggest, these things have a habit of pendulum-swinging back and now, looking around for a mu-sical which would give students a showcase for agents and producers, the director and choreographer Wendy Toye brilliantly hit upon a book which, though shaky, is per-fectly suited to drama-school graduates and a score studded with such gems as "Where or When" "My Funny Valentine," "The Lady Is a Tramp" and "I Wish I Were in Love Again."

There is a crucial distinction between this production and last year's London premiere of Sond-heim's "Merrily We Roll Along," also given by drama students, al-though at the Guildhall Where that show could be and indeed had been done elsewhere by professionals, this one is, I would have thought, unstageable except at a drama school.

opening exposition "The Lucky Chance" has oowhere to go but around in ever decreasing circles. Once we have been told at the outset what everyone is up to, and whose hed they wish to get them-selves into, all that's left is for us to watch that happen, which it does, often very slowly.

The plotting is restoration basic, the language uninspired and the surprises minimal; what we get ir a romp rather than any kind of social of consumption in the Crimea, does or sexual satire, and in the end, not prevent Pennington's looking despite considerable theatrical energy, there is not enough here to keep the mind alive, or awake.

Treasurers Find That Banks Fare Better Can Solve Rate Problems

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

By SHERRY BUCHANAN International Herold Tribine

▼ ENEVA — Corporate treasurers in Europe can now hedge against fluctuating interest rates as simply as they have been doing against currency shifts, but they are not using the regulated financial-futures markets. Instead, they are going off-market through some London banks. Many European corporations have stayed out of the financial-futures market in Chicago or London, but with the recent increase in interest-rate volatility in Britain, corporate treasurers dealing in pounds have a growing interest in hedging rates. "A lot of corporations are not that delighted with cumbersome methods used in the regulated financial-futures markets," says Brian Watters, executive director and treasurer of Citicorp International Bank Ltd., the merchant banking arm of Citi-Banks offer corp. What corporate treasura simpler way ers object to most are the inflexible dates of the futures contracts and margins.

"The financial-futures contract is slightly inflexible as for as some of our corporate clients are concerned," says

Ken Williams, chief trader with Hambros Bank in London. "They can't get the dates they want. And to hedge $5 million for example it's oot worth paying the margins every day."

to hedge than

futures markets.

The off-market futures hedging that a dozen or so London banks offer is simpler and more flexible than the regulated markets. It is especially attractive to companies that want to hedge $1 million to $5 million.

As an example, a company treasurer who knows his company will have to borrow $1 million two mooths from now to finance inventory buildup worries that interest rates are going to rise and that the money he intends to borrow will be more expensive. He wants to lock in lower current interest rates.

he treasurer goes to a bank that offers him an acceptable rate. When the time comes to borrow, if interest rates have risen, the bank will pay the company any difference in the interest rates. If, on the other hand, interest rates have fallen, the Astrabam Greenella company will pay the bank the difference.

The difference between the regulated financial-futures market and the off-market, Mr. Williams says, is that you get one big hit at the end of the transaction in the off-market. In the regulated futures market, the hedger pays a little every day. "So under the [off-market] system you have to make sure that your customer is more creditworthy," he says.

Some banks and brokers have started developing an interbank market to hedge against rate volatility. Tradition, the Lansanne-based international money broker, has just launched its new Futures Rate Agreements (FRAs). The Swiss brokers operate as a matchmaker between a bank wanting to hedge against a rise in ioterest rates and a bank wanting to hedge against a drop in rates. Such large U.S. and European banks as Barclays, Société Générale and the Banque Nationale de Paris are enthusiastic about the new idea. The main attraction is that an FRA, unlike a loan, is off the bank's balance sheet.

Most bankers expect the interbank market to complement the regulated financial-futures markets. But how a growth in the volume of interbank hedging against rate fluctuations will affect corporate treasurers is still unclear.

Some argue that a liquid interbank market could help banks offer more competitive prices to their clients.

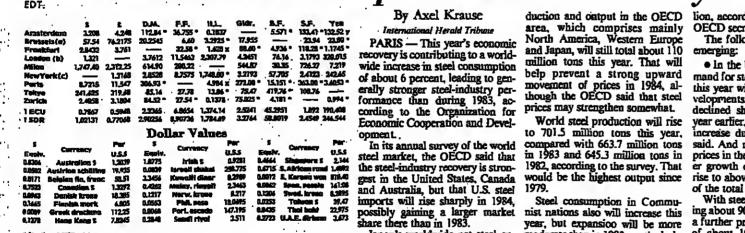

ity, the banks should be able to offer finer pricing to their corporate clients," says Daniel Treves, executive vice president of Compagnie Financière et de Credit (Tradition Group), a holding

But other bankers argue that they already offer their corporate clients competitive prices. "Whether we can hedge in this new interbank market or oot will not cliange anything in our dealings with our corporate clients," says Jacques Baudu, associate director of Société Générale in Paris. "That aspect of it however may be interesting for smaller banks that have greater difficulty in finding the matching funds for a hedge."

WASHINGTON — U.S. banks continue to encounter barriers to conducting business in foreign countries, but the restrictions are fewer than they were five years ago, according to a U.S. government

"The industry is not healthy, but it's hit bottom and [is] getting better," said John F. Kawa, who follows the industry for Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. The industry faces a list of problems: excess capacity, reduced demand from steel producers, tough export competition, environmental and safe-ty disputes, repeated strikes and increased trans-

Citicorp Profit Slipped Slightly In 2d Quarter

NEW YORK - Citicorp, the largest U.S. bank holding company, Tuesday reported that its second-quarter earnings fell 2 percent from a year ago and said overdue payments on loans to Argentina had a "negligible" impact on the Bankers Trust, 10th-largest U.S. bank company, said earnings were up 13 percent in the quarter, despite $103 million of nonperforming Argentine loans that reduced results by $1.7 million after taxes. Citicorp, had net income of $206 million, or $1.48 a share fully dilut-ed, down from $210 million, or

$1.51 a share, a year ago. It said that lower foreign exchange and money-market trading profits were the major factors in the earnings

Foreign-exchange earnings were $40 million, down from $67 million. Other trading profits were $13 million, down from $23 million. Bankers Trust earned $70 million, or $2.19 a share, in the second quarter, up from $61.8 million, or $2.04 a share, a year earlier. The earnings gain came primari-ly on non-interest income and despite the nonperforming loans, a rise in allowance for loan losses, lower foreign-exchange trading profits to $2.6 million from $11.4 million a year ago and a loss in other trading profits.

Bankers Trust increased its provision for loan losses to $40 million from $10 million last year. Citicorp, whose subsidiary Citiank is the second-largest U.S. bank ranked by deposits after Bank of America, divides its earnings into three "banks" - institutional, individual and investment.

Citicorp said recent regulatory guidelines on nonperforming loans had a negligible impact on earnings since they "reflected normal practice." Argentina's nonperforming loans increased by $138 million, bringing the total to $479 million. Citicorp's total loans to that comtry amount to $1.1 billion.

with Citicorp," said one analyst.
"Non-accrual Argentine loans are high — 44 percent of the total to that country - but they represented only 1 percent presax, or $11 million after-tax, of revenue."

Nonperforming and renegotiated loans in Ciucorp's portfolio amounted to $2.4 billion at the end of the second quarter. Revenue in Citicorp's individual banking sector was up 24 percent, but earnings were reduced by $3 million because of losses on the acquisitions of savings and loans in Chicago and Miami. John S. Reed, who has been named to succeed Walter B. Wriston as chairman of Citicorp on Aug. 1, headed the individual banking sector, which is "benefit-ing from the business initiatives of the last several years." the company said. Mr. Reed was credited with reversing losses incurred in Citicorp's strong move into automated banking several years ago. Citicorp bas, like many major banks, increased its primary capital. On June 30, primary capital, which includes total shareholder equity and valuation of reserve for loan losses, reached $7.8 billion, up from $6.1 billion a year earlier.

■ Court Defeat for Citicorp

The Tennessee Supreme Court in a setback for a subsidiary of Citicorp, has upheld a state law prohibiting out-of-state companies from operating industrial banks in the state, The Associated Press reported from Nashville, Tennessee,

On Tuesday, Bill Smith, vice president for Citicorp Financial Services Corp.'s Tennessee opera-tions, termed Monday's ruling a "temporary setback" in the compa-ny's effort to sell thrift certificates in the state.

The Supreme Court rejected Citicorp's contention that the state legislature's rush to close a loop hole earlier this year in a 1983 law amounted to illegal discrimination against out-of-state companies.

Steady Growth Predicted for Japan Economy

TOKYO — The Japanese economy will grow, producing the best performance seen for five years, a government agency said Tuesday.
Officials at the Economic Planning Agency said in a report growth was being helped by rising exports, increased consumer spending and rising industrial investment. Japan's growth rate in the fi-groups, such as the Japanese Economic Research Center, have said that the growth rate will be higher than 5 percent.

The last time the economy grew at more than 5 percent in a year was in 1979, before the second oil crisis prompted a period of lower growth. Last year Japan's growth rate was 3.7 per-

For decision-free photography just set the Canon T70 to 'Program mode.' All relevant information is shown on the LCD screen. Compose your picture through the clear viewfinder, focus, and

Two more auto-exposure program modes are available, so the T70 can help you with the most difficult shots.

As you become more familiar with the Canon 170 and its other features, the two metering options, the Canon Speedlite 277T with automatic flash exposure, and the Canon Command Back 70 with date and data imprinting and time operation, the more interesting and exciting your photography

IN Another Country" is not exactly a nov-el and not exactly a collection of short stories. It consists of six stories, all of them narrated by a 40-year-old woman named Sara, who lives with her husband, Phil, and their two young children. All of the stories deal with the deaths, illnesses and accidents that have haunted her life. As she puts it:

Ever since my father died . . . when I was 12. I have felt that it was my responsibility to keep everyone around me safe. This has meant saving them when necessary, at the very least hovering somewhat officiously, a walking first-aid manual, rapid extricator and rehabilitator of lost causes. Phil has called this my rescuer complex but, complex or not, I can't help believing deep down that whatever is lost can be recovered, what is broken can be mended, and what is gone replaced; at least it's worth a

The central event in Sara's life is her father's death. She adored him, and he her; when he was killed by a heart attack while traveling on business she felt at once inexplicably guilty and oppressively bereft. Even now, 28 years later, memories of his funeral and dreams about the circumstances of his death besiege her. Everything in her life seems to connect in some way with this now-distant death, to offer an unsolved clue to its meaning.

It is even worse for her mother. Her life is e
"wayward cycle of highs and lows," unpredictable and sometimes terrifying, as she shifts wildly in and out of dementia. She has been through assorted mental treatments, electric shock included, and now maintains an uneasy balance by means of Librium. But the knowledge is always there:

"Ever since my father died . . . she's been running away, unable to see his death as anything but a betrayal, B treachery, B failure. either on his part or hers. . . . It's still right there behind her, and if she reaches hack to straighten her stocking seams or fix her hair or zip her dress up all the way she may just by mistake put a hand on it, that one monstrous, unacceptable, inescapable fact of his death."

Sara's great fear is that this will be her fate too — to be so consumed by death, her father's or anyone else's, that she will be unable to live her life. It is B fear that becomes hrutally urgent when her husband suddenly is taken seriously, perhaps mortally, ill. As she sits in seriously, perhaps mortally, ill. As she sits in the waiting room of the hospital, not knowing if Phil is "dead or dying," she sees the connec-tions between all these deaths and illnesses. When Phil says, "This is the worst thing I could have done to you," she remembers her father and replies. "Thi take you with me just the way I have my father, You will he with me, You'll be with all of us." be with all of us."

At first she wonders if these are just words, words said more to comfort than out of convic-tion, and then she thinks: "What I've said to Phil is true; I have carried my father with me all these years, as real a presence in my life as those who are alive but in some other place." Even at a moment when her husband's future is painfully uncertain — even though she knows that to lose him, too, would seem unbearable and unsupportable—she begins to understand that she has been given gifts death cannot take

- Julier to B. away; in that understanding lies her hope for peace and comfort.

It is a true ending to a book that, though modest in size and ambition, contains a good measure of truth. It also, its many strengths notwithstanding, contains a good measure of empty space. In this novel about death, too much is inadvertently lifeless; too much dialogue is flat and unconvincing, too much is show, not enough is tell. Susan Kenney is clearly an intelligent, thoughtful writer whose good intentions are self-evident, but she has not managed to turn her thoughtfulness into a convincing work of fiction. "In Another Couptry" is pleasant to read and offers a certain amount of food for contemplation, but what it has to say is more interesting than how it says

Jezek and Pospichal, currently managing Sparta and Bohemians in Prague, have proven coaching records - and hearts that cannot stand the strain. Reputation, Beckenbauer will find, provides oo safety valve. He finished second too often, and he taught a chronic defensiveness that he as a player would never have accepted.

Beckenbauer might — just might — reignite the old arrogant belief in style. If not, he would be better off letting us remember what he was through 103 internationals. A rambunctious English center-forward named Framy Lee did that. He quit to establish a brood-mare stud farm and a soft-tissue manufacturing business...The latter sold a week ago for £8.25 million (about $10.9 million).

It was a panorama of shameless, clased, patriotic delight, the kind of reception that has followed the Olympic torch through much of its traditional passage from Olympia, Greece, to the Olympic site. A Vietnamese immigrant, his

The woman was Edna Karatsis, a retired department store saleswoman from San Francisco, and as she carried the torch for one kilometer through Golden Gate Park, her thin white hair was flying and her face was a great crinkle of smiles. She was pushed by a jogging Greg Compton, a San Francisco college student.

A well-muscled young woman lowered her unlit torch to eatch the flame from Karatsis and as the procession moved on Karatsis sat back in her wheelchair and obliged the photographers.

Veepcotting Convention

By Russell Baker

TEW YORK - I've canceled Francisco for the convention. thank you. No. of course I'm not mad at anybody. What's to be mad about? I've never said I was even half qualified to be vice president. have !? Have I ever said that?

Have I ever so much as intimated that I was even interested in the job? You know very well I haven't. so why should I be mad about any-

All right, if you push me to the wall, I'll be honest with you. Don't can give me your views on the vice I honestly believe, deep down, that I'm just as qualified for the joh as a lot of those jackasses who've had it rei Hobart and Levi P. Morton, for OK - I'll admit it - I feel more qualified than some of the more recent ones too. Totally unqualified as I may be for the job. I'm not half as unqualified as some of the recent disasters I could name.

No. I'm not going to name any names, and of course I'm not referring to former Vice President Mondale. I have nothing but admiration for Mondale, and I know that Mondale has equal admiration for me. He has told me so himself.

At a Washington reception, standing heside a table laden with cold cuts one evening. Mondale said to me. "I admire what you are doing." Certain people, people who have always tried to drive wedges between Mondale and me, later said. "When Mondale said he admired what you were doing, you were completing the manufacture of a club sandwich using the ingredients of the usual cut-rate catered reception cold cuts. He was merely praising your table skills, not your mastery of statecraft,"

These are the same people who say I'm avoiding San Francisco be-cause I'm mad. Where I come from we have a word for such people;

Let me say it just as baidly as I ean: I never expected Mondale to have me up to Minnesota for an interview, I well remember the day taken the job anybow, so why get I read in the newspapers that he mad at Mondale? On the other I read in the newspapers that he intended to interview every Tom, hand, what's be done for me lately?

Dick and Harry, every Mary, Jane and Susie. When I read that, I said to my wife, "I trust Mondale will my arrangements to go to San have the good taste not to insult me by inviting me to join such a motley

> To his eternal credit, he did not invite me.

Still, it would have shown a little class if he had telephoned. "Look here." he might have said. "I know you don't wast to be lumped in with this mob trooping up here into the sticks. Why don't I come to your place for the weekend so you

People like Gar-ly, it was just too much effort for Mondale to pick up the phone and make a call. I've got an answering machine on my phone to intercept

> I'm ready to deal with them. Sure, maybe Mondale didn't know about the answering machine, but he could have found out with a little ingenuity, couldn't he? A man who can't even find out whether a potential vice president has a relephone answering machine will make a pretty dim president, if

But don't get me wrong. I'm not mad. It's probably his staff that's to blame. They probably don't let him make phone calls, so how could be find out I had a telephone answer-ing machine if his staff wouldn't let him get to a telephone? By firing his staff, that's how, If I had a staff that wouldn't let me make my own phone calls, I'd cut them off the payroll faster than you can say Ronald Reagan. If I were vice president, you can bet I'd make my own calls, and until now I'd thought that's what Mondale would do if he became president.

Well, I was wrong about Monale. Otherwise he wouldn't have let his staff stop him from phoning me, No, no, no. I am not mad. Well, not terribly mad. Not as mad as I've got a right to be when I think about what his sloppy staffwork has cost the United States in vice presidential know-how.

Still, I probably wouldn't have

Examining Psychotherapy's Role Under the Nazis

By Daniel Goleman New York Times Service

N EW YORK — For the first time since World War II, German psychotherapists are vigorously examining their profession's past under the Nazi regime. Historical studies are revealing that, contrary to the common notios that psychotherapy was destroyed under the Nazis as "Jewish," it flourished in an institute headed by a psychotherapist who was a cousin of Hermann Göring. Freud's books were among the first to be burned. Yet some say that German psychotherapists under the Nazis enjoyed a privi-A series of articles in Psyche, a leading German psychoanalytie journal, has fomented angry debate among German psychoanalysts about the therapists who remained in Germany during World War II and became the leaders of the profession in the vears that followed. The debate has a special urgency because the International Psychoanalytic Congress, the most important meeting of the world's largest group of analysts, con-venes in West Germany next year for the first time in 50 years. Because of the hitter memories of persecution and anti-Semitism, the group has previously declined to meet there, despite the fact that the West German psychoanalytic association is one of the world's

The debate has been fueled by the historian Geoffrey Cocks, whose "Psychotherapy in the Third Reich" (Oxford University Press), is to be published in Janu-ary. Portions of it have been published in Psyche. The first psychoanalytic train-ing institute was founded in Berlin in 1920. Although Freud and his work quickly became targets of the Nazi regime, psychoanalysis continued to be used and taught, under some mild dis-guises. "Where Freud worked," Cocks writes, "Freud was used."

In 1933, German psychotherapists formed a national group, headed by Matthias Heinrich Göring, a cousin of Hermann Göring, who became the commander of the Luftwaffe, the German Air Force, Matthias Göring was a follower of Alfred Adler, one of Freud's early pupils, who had left 10 start his own school of therapy, and although not a leading thinker, he

ly had amicable relations with psychoanalysts.

According to one account, his wife, originally an ardent Nazi, entered psychoanalysis and warned her analyst in therapy ses-sions about which institute therapists were under suspicion.

Dr. Göring may even have had a hand in helping Freud escape from the Nazis in Vienna. Ac-cording to Max Schur, Freud's personal physician, in 1938, after the German annexation of Austria, there was division among Nazi leaders over what to do with the psychoanalysts there, includ-ing Freud. As Dr. Schur recalled it, a faction including Joseph was a useful figurehead because Goehbels and Heinrich Himmler of the family name, and apparent-wanted "to throw the wbole wanted "to throw the wbole group in prison," while Hermann Goring, under the influence of his psychiatrist cousin, was in favor of moderation."

Freud made his escape from Vienna a few months after the Germans had occupied the city. In 1936 Matthias Guring estab-lished The German Institute for Psychological Research and Psychotherapy in Berlin. The center, which quickly became known as the Goring Institute, had an active training program for thera-pists of many schools, including Freud's.

Many Luftwalfe officers attended seminars at the institute on short-term therapy to improve the handling of their men. At Dr. Göring's urging, the Luftwaffe set up psychotherapeu-tic aid stations in the field to help Dr. Göring, it was rumored, was involved in treating his cousin's morphine addiction. Another therapist was involved in concern among the Nazi hierarchy over Hitler's mental soundness. Some patients came because they were forced to by the Nazis. Bartens remembers one S.S. officer whose family sent him to be treated for homosexuality, a crime in Nazi Germany. The S.S. had threatened to kill him if he did not change.

The Göring Institute received financial support from the Nazis. By 1941 it had 240 professional members, and bad opened hranches in five other cities. The Nazis, Cocks argues, saw psychotherapy as a means to correct mental distress of Aryans with neurotic conflicts, "given the proper guidance of an innate Ger-It also empowered the thera-pists to "heal" in a way that could "subordinate the individual to the community," in the words of one slogan. The therapists at the Göring Institute, writes Cocks, accordingly offered "supportive and generally short-term thera-pies designed to further the integration of a happy and productive individual into society." Psychiatrists who saw mental

"Freud's name was never mentioned, and his books were kept in a locked bookcase." Psychoanalysis was to a degree disguised. A number of therapists at the institute, according to some accounts, protected military pa-tients accused of cowardice or malingering by delaying diagnosis and treatment.

As in other professions in post-war West Germany, those few therapists who had become active Nazis were largely shunned after the war. The one well-known resister, John Rittmeister, a Freudian at the institute who was executed for his efforts against the Nazis, is recalled now as a hero.

Dr. Rittmeister, who at one time headed the institute's outpatiens clinic, was the leader of a group of idealistic young leftists who believed that through discussions they could start a campaign that would persuade the German people to renounce Nazism. His group became part of a larger anti-Nazi network, another part of which was engaged in espionage for the Soviet Union. When the Gestapo arrested members of the ring. Dr. Rittmeister was caught, tried and executed.

In the postwar years the saga of the institute seems to have been the subject of a long silence in psychotherapy circles, even though psychotherapy after the war was passed on in large part by those who had worked or received their training there.

Now that it is being discussed the story seems full of grays rather than entirely black and white. As Cocks notes, what therapists did under the Reich "were not usually choices between good and evil; but among levels of culpabil-
